A Note for Parents

Read this once, then never think about it again.

Somewhere between the third cartoon and the fourth snack request, most of us have handed over a phone and quietly hoped for twenty minutes of peace. There is no guilt to be found here. It is simply what a long day does to a parent.

This book exists to give you a different twenty minutes. A pencil, a printed page, and a child leaning in because something on the paper is theirs to finish.

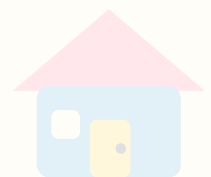

The alphabet is where reading begins, but very little of that beginning happens through repetition alone. It happens when a child notices that the shape they just traced is the same shape sitting at the front of their own name. That noticing is the real lesson, and it cannot be rushed.

So take these pages slowly. One sheet a day is plenty. Sit close by if you can, and let your child tell you what each picture is before they write anything at all.

Thirty nine worksheets sounds like a lot. It is really about six calm weeks of ten minute sessions, and at the end of it your child will know every letter by sight.

"I want to do this with my child today."

That single sentence is the only test every page in this book had to pass. We are not making worksheets. We are making moments you will both remember.

How to Use This Book

Six small things that make a big difference at the table.

1. Print on A4

Plain paper is perfect. Print single sided so the sheets can go up on the fridge afterwards.

2. One sheet a day

Little children learn in short bursts. Ten focused minutes beats an hour of persuading.

3. Say it before you write it

Ask your child to name the picture out loud first. Sound comes before symbol, always.

4. Let the lines be wobbly

Wobbly lines are a three year old holding a pencil correctly. That is the win, not neatness.

5. Praise the effort

Say what you saw. "You traced every single one" lands far better than "good boy".

6. Keep the finished pages

Put them in a folder. In six months you will both be amazed at the difference.

The book moves in four parts and gets gently harder as it goes. Part One is letter recognition. Part Two puts letters into short words. Part Three brings in first sounds. Part Four is practice and play. Work through them in order if you can.
